

I am strongly opposed to the weakening of Wisconsin's no-call list. The citizens of Wisconsin asked for the protection from nuisance calls and received it. The request to weaken it is a "private" interest from big business and does not serve the public interest.

In this day and age, consumers have numerous tools at the fingertips to select their own business relationships, whether it be internet, yellow pages, television advertising, newspapers, etc.

Allowing big business to contact us at our homes even after a business relationship has been terminated or when there was never one before is an invasion of privacy. Not to mention the cost it brings to the public. If businesses can now call us on our cell phones, WE are paying for the minutes....not the businesses. It is more than just a waste of time, now you are talking money.....
